Spirit is one of the four sectors of the compass model for self-care. Each area contributes to and helps build our compassion resilience. Spirit encompasses connecting to our sense of purpose with intentionality, exposing ourselves to resilience in those we serve, and recreating ourselves through rest and play.

Our sense of purpose provides direction to where we focus our energy, passion and growth. When we live our life in alignment with our core values, we have a strong sense of purpose. Being able to articulate our core values and our sense of purpose helps guide the choices we make. If our sense of purpose is not clear to us we become more vulnerable to compassion fatigue.

Understanding one’s sense of purpose is linked to many positive effects.

One way to increase our understanding of our sense of purpose is by developing a professional mission statement. Mission statements help us to be aware of what we want to drive our thinking, decisions and actions and support us to be intentional in our life and specifically, in our work.

Those in the education sector are considered to be in a “helping profession.” One aspect of a mission statement for people in helping professions is obviously that the outcomes of their work are beneficial to others. Compassion fatigue can occur when we do not feel like what we are doing is making a positive impact on those we seek to serve; this may feel like we are not serving our purpose. In order to support our spirit, we need to see evidence that we are making a difference in the lives of our students and to understand that they have a reservoir of resilience that, when combined with effective supports, can lead to successful and satisfying lives.

Rest and play are also key components to the spirit sector. Taking the time for rest and the time for play nourishes our ability to live out our sense of purpose. Our core values and sense of purpose can determine the types of activities or recreation that fulfill us.

In this section you will look at ways to articulate your sense of purpose, expose yourself to positive stories of the impact of your work and resilience of your students and their families, and reflect on your own rest and play. It also provides school leaders with suggestions for systematizing the celebration of school staff and exposure to stories of resilience.

Activity: Share Stories of Resilience

1. Share staff success stories (positive outcomes of their efforts with students, parents or co-workers) regularly through internal communication tools already in place, at the start of staff meetings, etc.

2. Share stories of past students who presented challenges to staff and are currently doing well. When we run into these youth in our communities, ask them if you can share how they are doing with the school staff. They may love it, and your staff will love hearing it. Even if they did not know the student, they can transfer that hope to their current students. “I caught ____ doing well!”

3. RogersInHealth.org offers free, brief videos of youth and adults talking about their mental health challenges and their path of recovery. Go to RogersInHealth.org for youth, adult and parent stories.
Activity: Developing Your Professional Mission Statement

Contemplating and articulating our personal and professional mission can bring awareness to what drives us and allow for intentionality in our life and specifically, in our work. If our sense of purpose is an unconscious motivator of our thoughts, feelings and behaviors, it can complicate our ability to act competently, with self-awareness. Job satisfaction and compassion resilience are connected to being able to see that we are fulfilling our sense of purpose – our mission.

A good mission statement is clear and focused, has emotional appeal, and is built to last*.

Begin by answering what, why, who, and how.

- What do you do?
- Why do you do it?
- Who do you want to help?
- How will you get your desired result?

My mission statement

Tips for your mission statement: use empowering and positive language. The goal is when you see your mission statement it renews you energy and sense of purpose in your work.

After you have written your mission statement, it takes intentionality to have this statement influence your daily work. Therefore, it may be helpful to select an object that you can associate with your mission statement. This could be simply your mission statement written out and placed on the wall, it could be a picture, a small desk figurine or toy-get creative! Make it personal and connect it to your mission statement. Then when you see that object, quote, or statement you will be reminded of why you are doing what you do and why it is worth it to continue.

Circle Topic: Grounding/Wellness Practice (5 minutes)

In a calm and soothing voice, guide them to relax their minds and bodies. Ask them to quiet their minds by simply noticing when thoughts come into their minds and allow them to leave without attention to them. Guide them to relax their bodies from head to toe, one area of their bodies at a time.

Review (5 minutes)

During our last circle, we covered the mind sector of the toolkit where we looked at mindful self-awareness, the role our sense of competency plays in our job satisfaction and shared some tips on organization. Today, we’re going to move on to the spirit sector of the toolkit.

Self-Care for CR, Part One and Guiding Questions (10 minutes)

Balancing rest, play and work is one area of the wellness compass’s spirit sector. The grounding activity we did was a chance for us to practice restfulness and relaxation.

(Talking piece) What is a way you find joy or rest in your workday?

Self-Care for CR, Part Two and Putting it into Practice (15 minutes)

Explain: In the spirit sector of the toolkit we look at our core values and our ability to balance rest, play and work. For many of us, our career selection was based on our core values and we find meaning when our values are evident in the outcomes of our work. For instance, if respect is a value and through my work people are learning to be more respectful, my value is evident in that result. Compassion fatigue can occur when we do not feel like what we are doing is making a positive impact on those we seek to serve according to our values. This may feel like we are not serving our purpose. In order to support our spirit, we need to see evidence that we are making a difference in the lives of those we serve and to understand that they have a reservoir of resilience that, when combined with effective supports, can lead to successful and satisfying lives.

1. (Talking piece) What led you to your field of work?
2. (Reflection) Reflect on a leader in your current or past experience who helped you make a clear connection between your work and the mission of the organization?
3. (Popcorn) I’d like three or four examples, who is willing to share what that leader did?
4. (Talking piece) How could you remind yourself of the link on a daily basis?
CR Section 9: Wellness and Resilience Strategies: Spirit

Closing (10 minutes)

1. (Popcorn or choose what number of participants have enough time to share out)
   Share a story with a beginning, middle and end about a time when you saw the fruits of your labor and experienced a positive outcome from your efforts working with others.

2. (Popcorn) How might we consciously seek out more positive stories about the impact of our work?

Bonus Activity: Suggest that the participants focus between sessions on either seeking out and sharing a positive story of the impact of the work or selecting and bringing into their workspace a visual that reminds them of the link between their work and their personal and organizational mission.
Rest and Play Reflection

Experiencing resilience in the spirit area of rest and play means engaging in activities that are truly re-creative of our bodies and our spirits.

When do you feel most alive? What are you doing? What or who are you surrounded with?

When do you feel most like yourself?

Where is the artist in you? Are you an artist in communication, in cooking, in selecting fun activities, in finding interesting details about life, etc.?
Activity: Book Study

The Courage to Teach; Exploring the Inner Landscape of a Teacher’s Life, by Parker Palmer. This book takes teachers on an inner journey toward reconnecting with themselves, their students, their colleagues, and their vocations, and reclaiming their passion for one of the most challenging and important of human endeavors.
